The aye-aye has to be one of the strangest looking creatures on the Africa island of Madagascar, where they live in the wild. In fact, as a threat by the humans it shares the island with. The Malagasy people believe that the eye-eye is magical, and that if they see one, it spells bad luck. Many of the island's people are suspicious about the big-eared creature that they will kill one on sight, hoping to prevent anything 'evil' from happening to their village. And the eye-eye's bad reputation isn't helped by the fact that it's active only at night, when things can seem a lot scarier to people.

The cat and the horse

by James Lucas 4th class Mr Molamphy

One day there was a cat named Bob. He saw a farm so he went over. Standing there was a huge horse. He said "Hello my name is Fred,". He had a saddle so the cat tried to ride him so he jumped on, but fell off. He tied a rope onto Fred so he could stay on. He got onto Fred and struggled to hold on but he fell off again. So he had to think of a way to stay on Fred. He went to ask the farmer for help but the farmer said "Sorry you cannot ride that!". Then Bob said "Why not?". The farmer replied "because you are a cat!!". All the time Bob had been trying to ride Fred he forgot he was a cat!!

The End

Step 1—Brush your hair so there is no knots

Step 2 – grab a big bit of your hair from the front, bring it towards the back of your head and divide it into 3 parts

Step 3 – bring the bottom piece over the middle piece, and then bring the top piece over the middle piece (so you are really just doing a normal braid)

Step 4 – grab another piece of your hair from the top and add it to the top piece of your braid

Step 5 – bring the top piece over the middle piece

Step 6 – grab the bottom piece with your pinkie

Step 7 – drop the piece you have on your pinkie, and get another piece from the bottom

Step 8 – bring the new piece over the middle piece Step 9 – continue doing this until you get halfway around your head, and pin it with a bobby pin

Step 10 – do this again on the other side and then you are done. You can also do this the whole way around your head instead of stopping halfway

Cubes Cubes by Amanda Brown

On a quiet winter day, a girl got a babysitting job. The girl's name was Lily. She was minding a boy called Bob and a girl named Jessica. They lived in an apartment. When they were in the apartment they were watching sky news and they heard that a mad killer escaped from jail he was called Cubes. Nobody really knew why he was called Cubes? Well at about seven "o" clock the children were playing in there, Lily had left the window wide open, and she had headphones on. There was and there was a loud bang but she could not hear it, and then she hears the children scream. Lily said "Are you alright?" she did not hear anything back. So she ran upstairs in the room and..... the children were cut into cubes!!!! That's why he was called Cubes

Slender man is a fictional character created using Photoshop by an Internet forum user, Victor Surge in 2009. Some, however, believe this urban legend has been around in many countries for hundreds of years. The Slender man is also known as the Tall Man, The Branch Man and the Tree Man. He is the main character in a number of video games such as Slender: The 8 Pages, Slender's Woods, Slender's Mansion and Slender: The Arrival. He stands about ten feet tall. He appears to wear a black suit, a shirt and a tie. He has no face. He has no eyes, nose or mouth and he is bald. His skin is completely white. He has impossibly long arms, sharp pointy fingers, tentacles that sprout from his back and he is really, really scary.
